Summary of encryption/decryption

The program changes start with using a filereader to read in all of the content of the specified text file into a string. The file is then closed. At this point the encrypt/decrypt method is called to take the string value and encrypt it. The encrypted data is then written to a new text file. The next step in the process is to open the file and read in the encrypted content. Once the data has been retrieved from storage it's run through the encrypt/decrypt method; this time to decrypt the method. Lastly the decrypted file is then saved to its own new file.
